LIME AT SMALL COST FOR VIRGINIA FARMERS

Commissioner of Agriculture Koiner
Has Plan to Supply Remote
Sections.

WILL INSTALL PRIVATE MILLS

Declares That Plant of Portable Character Would Be Profitable Investment—Make Own Clover Seed, Is Advice Given.

Commissioner of Agriculture George W. Koiner has worked out a plan whereby farms remotely situated from the lime-grinding plant at Staunton can be supplied with lime at small cost when desired without having to call on the Staunton plant.

This does not mean that the Commissioner considers the plant inadequate to meet all demands throughout the State during the year. Mr. Koiner has discovered, however, that the abundance of lime in many counties contiguous to the farms that require it can be conveniently and speedily taken from the earth and ground at a cost that will justify farmers in using it.

Inquiries concerning the new lime-grinding plant, which is now under construction, are coming in. A committee from the lime-growing farmers inured the scheme devised by the Commissioner. He suggested to the farmer that a lime-grinding mill be installed in that section, limestone being abundant there. He suggested that the farmer would find it profitable to invest about $100 in such a mill, using it to grind lime for himself and other farmers in the country. The mill could be easily moved from farm to farm, each farmer paying a fair price for the service.

CONVINCED THAT PLAN WOULD HELP FARMER

Commissioner Koiner is convinced that mills of this description could be installed in all sections of the State where limestone is found and where they would be of great profit to the farmers. The state plant at Staunton, of course, is badly needed by farmers in those sections where there are no deposits of lime. The private lime-grinding mills would not be profitable in these sections.

He suggests two community mills, that is, two grinding mills of portable character, that may be moved from farm to farm to be owned by groups of farmers. The cost of the mill would be paid off in a short time and could quickly derive from the use of the machinery the money he originally invested.

Commissioner is urging the farmers to make their own crimson clover seed instead of paying high prices for it. Crimson clover seed has increased in price 100 per cent since the war in Europe began. The same scheme suggested for lime-grinding, he says, may be applied to producing clover seed. He suggests that farmers purchase clover seed, either, or both, either individually or jointly. The hullers can be moved from farm to farm and used in making the seed, great advantage of this plan is that the farmer will always have fresh seed.

ONE FARMER SELLS SEED FOR OVER $1,000

The Commissioner has been informed of one case in which a farmer purchased crimson clover seed and made his own crimson clover seed, he sold from his farm $1,000 worth of the seed in a single season. The farm is in Amherita County. "It would pay a man handsomely," said Mr. Koiner, "to invest in either a lime-grinding mill or a similar and move around from farm to farm, grinding lime or making clover seed."

Commissioner Koiner is also urging the farmer to make more attention to live stock raising. The demand for beef cattle is always large and the price good.

Mr. Koiner raised the question with Koiner, "that he shipped a carload of cattle to New York last week which netted him $120 for each steer. The steers were, of course, blooded bulls."

Commissioner Koiner is also urging the farmer to make more attention to live stock raising. The demand for beef cattle is always large and the price good.
